Although there is a stereotype that Baja, Porsches, and certain other U.S. cars are "boring", they are actually designed to get the driver to his destination in comfort and safety. Baja and Porsche do not automatically equate to slow speed and low power, especially when considering the fact that the GTO is rated at and the Twin Turbo is. For this reason, we have attempted to keep the car's weight as low as possible, in order to get the most speed out of it. The GTO uses the same engine, the 6.0 L flat-6 from the 944 Turbo, and the 934 Turbo. However, the twin turbochargers from the 934 Turbo were used in the GTO, which gives it more torque. The GTO was completely stripped of its old, unreliable, CVH heads and other parts which increased the car's value, and made it a more accurate representation of the original 944. The twin turbochargers are also heavier, resulting in a lower center of gravity. There are fewer than 30 surviving GTOs in the United States, and a total of only about 400 in the world.

They are highly sought-after by collectors, as well as by collectors of rare American sports cars. With the GTO, Porsche set out to make a car that combined power and simplicity. It was the basis for the other mid-engine sports cars. The 944.2 engine was almost the same as the GTO's, but with an oil sump for the turbochargers and a transmission oil cooler. It was called the 944.2 because of the twin air filter elements and the 2-valve per cylinder heads, although it is more than a 944.1. The 944.2 engine was originally designed by Dr. Ferdinand Porsche, but it was later redesigned by him and tested by him to perfection. Porsche began production of the 944.2 in September 1973. A total of only 10 944.2s were produced in its initial year of production (1973), and then it was replaced by the 944.2.1 (known as 944.2.1.0 in some markets). The 944.2.1 was completely different from the 944.2, and in 1974 only 11 of them were made. The 944.2.1 was replaced in 1974 by the 944.2.2, which used the same
